CONTRIBUTORS

Steven L. Scott is Associate Professor of Geography at the University of Northern Colorado, at Greeley. Dr. Scott's research interests are in Great Plains settlement patterns and Western water problems. He is currently continuing to research small county seats in the Great Plains and recently had published an article in Geographic Perspectives, "Characteristics of Selected Great Plains County Seats."

Dr. Lawrence H. Larsen is Professor of History at the University of Missouri-Kansas City. Other publications include articles on the upper Great Plains states, "Cities and Silos Upon the Plains: The Differing Urban Histories of Kansas and North Dakota," with Roger Johnson, and "The Gate City: A History of Omaha," with Barbara J. Cottrell. Professor Larsen also authored, "The Urban West at the End of the Frontier." He is currently active in developing Canadian studies programs.

William E. Koch, Associate Emeritus professor of English and Folklore at Kansas State University, has been a lifelong collector of Kansas songs, tales, and legends. In 1961 he co-authored the book, Kansas Folklore. His latest book, published by the Regents Press of Kansas titled, Folklore From Kansas: Customs, Beliefs, and Superstitions, was the product of a fifteen-year survey covering every county in Kansas. Bill Koch is the acknowledged dean of Kansas folklorists. In 1967, Koch received recognition for his contributions to the Place Name Survey of the United States, a bicentennial project of the American Name Society.

Louise Monfredo, a graduate of Emporia State University, spent her childhood on a Kansas farm. A former school teacher, twice a widow, the mother of three grown children, a writer and a poet, she presently lives in Worcester, Massachusetts. Her first book of poetry, Thin Ice, was published in 1981.
